Prisoners Who Got Justice in Judge Kimball's Court Today. There was an even two dozen souls in the Police Court cells this morning, and the first one to appear in Judge Kimball's procession was poor Joe Kelly, an unfortunate victim of winds, stationary, followed by a slight rise in rum, who has seen better days.

Joe is about sixty years old, and although he was a frequent guest of the court several years ago he has not been before the court at such 31. Receiving reservoir, temperature, 50. ALBAUGH'S.—Mr. Stuart Robson is a most valuable figure on the American stage. His unique personality, entertaining as it is, contributes less to his importance than his thorough appreciation of what is good and his steady purpose to give the highest ideals of comedy to the public. In the case of "The Henrietta" he secured his material at home and from his own generation. Last night he went back to Buckston's delicious comedy "Married Life." The play is one that gives a delightful picture of the times when people were much more stately, more gorgeously dressed and much more frank than they are today. The humor is steady and delightful, and the language graceful at all times. Mr. Robson as Henry Dove, ALBAUGH'S.-Mr. Stuart Robson is a most graceful at all times. Mr. Robson as Henry Dove who married much above his station and whose manners in good society constitute the greater portion of the fun, was wonderfully clever and amusing. He fits the part beautifully and preserves the full force of the comedy without at any time broadening it beyond the bounds of naturalness. The company is a good one from beginning to end. Mrs. Robson was a charming Mrs. Coddle and Mr. Woodward was thoroughly entertaining as Mrs. Coddle. Mr. El. oughly entertaining as Mr. Coddle. Mr. Elwood as Lynz was a most agreeable actor, and the others, including Mr. Haliton, who is a young man of unquestionable promise, con-tributed each an important share to a delight-ful entertainment. NATIONAL.—A large audlence at the National last night thoroughly enjoyed Mr. E. S. Willard and his company of excellent players in Henry Arthur Jones' well-known play, "The Middleman." It is a powerful play throughout and the character of Cyrus Blenkarn is peculiarly adopted to Mr. Williard who plays always in adapted to Mr. Williard, who plays always in the lower register and moves an audience rather by what he does not do than by what he does. He gives always such a sense of confidence in his power that an audience enjoys that sense even more than if he displayed the latent force and dissipated it. He is the storm king, swaying the forests as he will, yet leaving them upright, to again feel his power, always conscious that the greater energy is unexpended. No more impressive actor plays than is Mr. No more impressive actor plays that is all.
Willard, yet he is not in all senses the greatest actor. The company about him is perfectly adapted to fill their parts in the cast and their work is at all times in harmony with his. Miss Burroughs is at all times charming, with a manliness that captivates her audience, and Miss Eliiott as Maude Chandler is a grace ful, grateful figure in the play. After the last curtain the audience insisted on seeing the players, and there was a general call and every-body came to the front and bowed acknowl-ACADEMY.—Thespis was a triplet at the Academy last night, and with "The Major's Appoint-ment" for a prologue, Lottie Collins for an interlogue and "Gloriana" for an epilogue, the combination was considerably in advance of usual theatric attraction. "The Major's Appointment," a dramatization of Julia Schayer's very pathetic story by Neison Wheateroft and e Backus, affords Mr. Edwin Stevens an opportunity to present most acceptably a fine old-man character. The finer touches of the story are lost in its stage materialization, but it is effective and affective, and is an excellent preparation for the livelier spirit of what follows. At 8:50 Lottie Collins, who has "Ta-ra-boom-de-ayed" on a previous occasions here, appears and gets nearly as much enthusiasm as if nobody had ever seen her or heard that time before. "Gloriana," a three-act farce, follows the frolicsom Lottie, and it is genuinely funny, albeit Thespiseems to ride the horse too hard at times. It has been a success in London, Paris and New York, and naturally Washington does not disregard the opinion of its contemporaries and it will be a success here. The three leading characters in the play as played are Edward Stevens as Count Eristoff, Mr. Otis Harlan as Spinks, a valet, and Miss Henrietta Crossman as Mrs. Lovering (Gloriana), a delightful, delirious, delicious, domineering widow. Miss Cross man is superbly handsome and she does Gloriana as well possibly as any woman on the stage could do it. Mr. any woman on the stage could do it. Mr. Stevens as the Count is excellent at all points and equally as good in quite a different line is Mr. Harlan as Spinks, the valet. The other characters were in the main well taken. The play was received with salvos of applause at every point, and there was in attendance as fine an andience as the Academy has sheltered this season. It might be well to suggest in connection with this notice that the performance begins at 8 o'clock and that it is bad form and bad manners for people to come tramping into the theater for three-quarters of an hour after-

It was a distinguished audience, too, Mrs. Cleveland, Mrs. Bissell and Private Secretary Thuring friends with them. The most distinguished people in political and social circles were there with their families and friends, and no artist ever had a more generally ap-preciative throng of auditors. The program was certainly sufficiently varied to test the performer's versatility, and that he filled the expectations of his audience was manifest from the close attention paid during his performance and the applause that followed each number. The mastery which this artist has over the piano is complete. Every technical difficulty has been conquered and he accomplishes the most marvelous mechanical feats with perfect ease and accuracy. His fingering is graceful, rapid, clear and distinct, and in some of his octave passages his work is bewildering. But beyond this Paderewski has the true musicianly spirit and the poetic temperament that enables him to grasp the true meaning of the composer and to make it throb under his touch upon the keys. This was particularly noticeable in his Chopin numbers, in the Bach-Liszt fantasia, in his own nocturne and in the concluding that says which he read and in the concluding rhapsody, which he read The encores came upon the Chopin etude, a very unusual compliment, when he gave his Jack's Creole Company, better than ever be-fore, pleased a large audience at Kernan's last evening. The company has changed materially since last season and is now entitled to a place among leaders of variety entertainment. The combina-tion march was clever and effective. Mitchell and Minor, the latter a familiar figure about Washington, proved themselver clever comtion of the xylophone correct and pleasing. to the higher court for a final decision. It is expected that the Court in General Term will dispose of the question at an early date, and that the law had been defined. "I think, howtheir action is to be. Should the upper court ustain Judge Miller, as is confidently expected by counsel for the District, and the licensed laces be required to procure new licenses ander the high license law the revenues of the District will be largely increased.

THE JUDGE'S DECISION. In his remarks in deciding the case yesterday Judge Miller held that the licenses issued under the act of August, 1871, were not contracts and conferred upon the holders thereof no vested rights beyond the power of Congress to impair. In construing the Nau case the court remarked that it did not understand that case to decide that the act of 1871 was one for revenue only (as contended by counsel for defendant), (as contended by counsel for defendant), but that the non-payment of the license tax being the only enforcable provision of the law the information against Nau was defective for want of averment that defendant had failed to pay such tax.
The court said the act of 1871, while it purported to be an act to impose an occupation tax, threw around the liquor traffic certain police restraints which clearly indicated that the police power of the legislature was exer-cised in respect thereto and placed these licenses upon the same footing with those in the several states in which the decisions read by the district attorney had been rendered. The legislature of the District, which passed the act of 1871, had no power to grant a license beyond the power of future legislation to con-trol or regulate nor to sell or barter away for any consideration the right of future legisla-tion to deal with these licenses.

The court then took up the act of March 3, 1893, and declared that it undertook to regulate the entire subject of liquor selling in the Dis-trict of Columbia, and established a new system which should be lieu of and as a substitute for all pre-existing laws and regulations upon the subject. This the court held repealed the act of 1871 as far as it affected this busi-ness and necessarily involved the destruction of the licenses granted under it. The court had never known a more uniform concurrence of authorities than existed in favor of the position that the adoption of a new system of license laws of this kind, without a saving clause in the act, carried with it the abrogation of all existing license under the old act. The case of Brown agt. State, 52 Georgia; Pluter agt. State, 11 Nebraska, and Met. Board of Excise agt. State of New York were cited by the court as leading ases in support of this proposition.

The court then pointed out the inconsistencies in the two acts, and declared that the act of 1893 could not be put in practical operation

if the act of 1871 was to stand, nor could the licenses granted under the latter act survive, as all the incidental regularities which formed par of the license itself had been swept away by the new act. In conclusion the court said that good time had been devoted by Congress to the consideration of the several measures introduced upon this subject. It had before it the imper-fections of the old law and it was evidently its intention to establish by the present act a new order of things entirely untrammeled by any existing law or regulation whatever. For these reasons the offer of the license of defendant as evidence was overruled. THE OLD LICENSE NO JUSTIFICATION. The court overruled the offer of counsel to put in proof the old license as a justification and also the regulations under which they were issued.

Counsel had nothing to say to the jury, and ask that the court instruct the jury to return a the judge briefly charged that if the jury found that the liquor was sold in quantities less than five gallons they should find a verdict for the District. A VERDICT OF GUILTY.

The jury thereupon returned their verdict of guilty, and counsel for Bush gave notice that The they would file the necessary motions in order information was not properly framed. The they would file the necessary motions in order court thought all was necessary was to charge to get the case to the upper court before April 3, when the act establishing the Court of Ap-A SENTENCED IMPOSED.
